Ceremonial Occasions

The first degree conferment ceremony of the University of Surrey was held in 1966 in the University Hall at Battersea. When the University moved to Guildford, the Civic Hall and then the Odeon Cinema were used for ceremonies. Since July 1970, however, by kind permission of the Dean and Chapter, degree conferment ceremonies have been held in Guildford Cathedral, which on these occasions is used as a secular building.

Visitors

Over the years, the University of Surrey has hosted visits by many distinguished people: members of the Royal Family, academics, politicians, artists, sportsmen, diplomats, clerics. Portrayed on the following pages is a small selection of those who have visited the campus.

A Celebration of Thirty-Five Years of Achievement

In the best traditions of scholarship, the University of Surrey celebrated the 35 years of its life in Guildford on 29 May 2002. A service of thanksgiving and the conferment of Honorary Degrees in the Cathedral was followed by a procession through Guildford’s famous High Street in the company of its partners in education and in the local community. The Chancellor, HRH The Duke of Kent, unveiled a sculpture, The Surrey Scholar, that will stand as a permanent reminder of the University in the heart of the town.

Left: The procession through the town was led by buglers from the Surrey Army Cadets Fanfare Team and the Surrey Pipe Band.

The Vice-Chancellor

A very large number of people have contributed to this magnificent record of the first thirty-five years of the University of Surrey, and I am most grateful to all of them. I would like to thank in particular Christopher Pick, who wrote the text; The Colour Works, for design and production; Sylvia Tyler, who did excellent work in assembling the illustrations; the staff of our archives, led by Arthur Chandler and more recently by Maureen Shettle; and Trevor Thorne, the University’s Director of Marketing and Public Affairs, who has led and co-ordinated the project.

Patrick Dowling
Guildford, July 2002

Christopher Pick

I would like to thank Patrick Dowling and Trevor Thorne for giving me the opportunity to write this book and to immerse myself in the history and current work of a fascinating institution. The two principal sources I used in researching my text were the University’s extensive archives and interviews with a large number of University staff members, past and present, and friends of the University. I would particularly like to thank all of them for taking the time to talk to me, for providing me with much useful source material, and for checking parts of the text. They are: Alf Adams, Steve Baker, Susan Balgarnie, Peter Beardsley, Bill Bellerby, Glynis Breakwell, Gwyn Brown, Peter Butterworth, Derry Caleb, Arthur Chandler, Mike Clark, Jane Cohen, Tom Crawshaw, Alwyn Davies, John Davies, Wyn Davies, Patrick Dowling, Sir George Edwards, Lewis Elton, Pat Grayburn, Peter Goldfarb, Bob Gunn, John Hobrough, Gordon Hartman, Barry Hitchcock, Nigel Hodge, John Humphries, Adam Jakeway, David James, Brian Johnson, Anthony Kelly, Michael Kipps, R Kotas, Sir Richard Meyjes, Audrey Nice, Bill North, Oliver Parker, Malcolm Parry, Richard Paxton, Jack Penycate, David Pollard, Rosemary Pope, Stan Portalski, Caroline Royle, John Salmon, Ken Stephens, Jane Stockall, James Strawson, Sir Martin Sweeting, Arthur Tarrant, Trevor Thorne, David Varney, Sue Walton, Fiona Wareham, David Watts, and Margaret Westwood. I also drew on the two invaluable previous histories of the University and Battersea Polytechnic, by Roy Douglas and H Arrowsmith.

In addition, a very large number of people in the University and outside it provided information and checked sections of the text. That they are too numerous to name here does not diminish my gratitude to them.

I must, however, mention especially Emeritus Professor John Salmon, who was a never-failing source of information and advice on Battersea Polytechnic and on the first years of the University in Guildford; and Sylvia Tyler, who, besides assembling a superb collection of illustrations, acted as a guide to the University during the 1980s and 1990s. In addition I am most grateful to all the alumni who contributed recollections of their years in Guildford and Battersea; to Leonard Kail, John Salmon, Arthur Tarrant and John Taylor, each of whom wrote one of the portraits of key figures in the University’s history; and to Gordon Hartman and Richard Hinton, for supplying the images of leaves from trees in the University’s collection that appear on the inside covers of this book.

I would also like to thank Gemma Madle, who undertook research at an early stage in the project, Catherine Dawson and Antony Mason for editorial assistance, Suzanne Bosman for help with photographs, Maureen Shettle of the University’s archives, Christopher Yates, archivist at Westminster-Kingsway College (which now occupies what was formerly the principal building of Battersea Polytechnic), and Robin Bishop and Margaret Bryant for architectural and historical advice.
