

Avoid passive kitchen occupancy

Because cooking emissions pose a risk to human health, passive occupants (people not involved in cooking such as children, elderly people, pregnant women and those with respiratory allergies or diseases) should avoid the kitchen during cooking. Those who cook should leave the kitchen whenever no supervision is needed to reduce their exposure to cooking emissions.

GLOBAL CENTRE FOR CLEAN AIR RESEARCH

UNIVERSITY OF SURREY

Guildford
Living Lab