For Doctoral Students with disabilities

- The University of Surrey will not discriminate against you because of your disability. However we cannot arrange for reasonable adjustments unless you have disclosed your disability/disabilities. We are very experienced in supporting students with a range of disabilities which might be physical, long term medical, mental health or autistic spectrum conditions, or Specific Learning Differences.

- In order to support you during your studies you need to register with Additional Learning Support and meet with a disability adviser. He will discuss the impact of your disability on your studies and with your permission, create a list of reasonable adjustments which is available to key staff.

- UK students are encouraged to apply for the Disabled Students Allowance (DSA) or the research councils’ equivalent allowances. These non means tested allowances fund assistive technology and non-medical helper support for students with disabilities. The University of Surrey makes funds available to provide similar support for EU and International students who are not eligible to apply for the DSA. The disability advisers will be able to advise you on how to apply for this support. Please contact als@surrey.ac.uk.
